Views of Leading Englishmen On Jack the Ripper.

THE FATE OF HOGAN, AERONOUT.

Lost in the Sea-Children Poissoned The Whitechanel Victim-A Gang of Counterfeiters Lowry After Them.

(Special to THE HERALD-Examiner Dispatch.) Lorrors, July 18.—[By special cable to the New York Herald.]—Mr. Robert Buchanan, while engaged at a rehenrall at the Haymarket theatre, said: "I do not think Jack the Ripper committed the mur-der; it seems to lack the atrocious skill displayed by him; there is none of the really distinctive handiwork of the original riend. He is probably an imitator, some weak brained creature rendered crary by gloating over the details of the horrible offairs of last year. Of course that is very mose guess work, but the evidence at present is so slight." Mr. Buchanan had not heard the latest

Mr. Howman had not heard the latest details when he spoke.

Mr. George Moore was engaged in correcting the manuscript of his forthcoming novel. He thought the marderer to be gade. Could he imagine a notive "Very easily. I have made up a theory almost from the first, and I still believe in it. The absence of the motives which generally lie at the root of a marder is very roundraftly, for these srime-spacehot committed for gain; that at least is certain. They are not, it thank, committed out of revesure. My theory is that they are the worked some weak brained readen of the parity chass. Perhaps this unspendable wretch thinks that by reveating a panic amount the poor women of the class he preys on, he may frighten them from their prefersion. It is an insame idea, of course, but a cened table one. He is the day. That is my like."

Dr. Weills, the nathor of "Fatal Physic," throught that the murnicrer was Jack; he could not helieve there were two such ynters.

The novelist, James Payn, had no theory, sains a voyage around the cape in a ship on which we staughtored our cattle for the table.

"A doctor who is a friend of mine made a succession at the may she had the Kipper was hosy in Whitechaped last year that he certain class of disarders which sometimes tories to homiside, the mania for it is especially directed against women, and it mixed be worth white to make inquires at the hospitals as to whether any man with symptoms of such a disorder was dissistanced at about this date."

Mr. Henry Labouchere said: "It does not seein possible to form a theory which will held water. I have seen and heard a soore had never one without a libel in it. In fact most of them were all holes.

"As to whether short the Eipper is one person or more; well, even that is doubt tal. I should say that he lives or they live at a distaince from Whitechapel. The man must have some thing place in which to conseal his ciolles, while can hardly escape the stains of blood. In that district everyhely would see such stains, and be soon the qui vive that he could not have found such secrety as was needful.

"Is he mad? Well, no. I should say he was conspletiously since. I have seen something of mad beopte, and they all talk; they can't keep a secret. Of course this man has very particular reasons for keeping his tength between his teeth. If he were caught, a Whitechapel mob would make short work of him. But still his silender speaker by the best of the same which gives a mything man from the half will he sold the case which incline me to think the man is instance or why a muricator, even such a murderer, need be mad, is a nate this any other.
